

FarPoint Spread by GrapeCity wins the Best .NET Grid Control Award from CodeProject

FarPoint Spread for Windows Forms is the winner in the CodeProject's 2010 members choice awards in the Grid Controls category

Kirkland, WA – June 14, 2010 - GrapeCity announced today that FarPoint Spread for Windows Forms has won the best .NET Grid Control award from CodeProject, one of the world's largest online developer communities. CodeProject announced the winners of their Second Annual Members Choice awards for best development products and tools at a reception preceding Microsoft®'s TechEd 2010 conference in New Orleans.

CodeProject.com members were asked to rate their favorites products. The Code Project staff then compiled the highest rated listings, awarding the highest ranked in each product category. The results reflect actual perceptions of what developers value.

According to Jeff Hadfield, president of The Code Project (USA), "As before, The Code Project Members Choice Awards reflect the diversity and depth of the tools available to professional developers around the world. This past year has brought even more user interface (UI) tools but also more tools to support all aspects of the development process. Congratulations to the winners, and to the development community for encouraging innovation and excellence."

Commenting on GrapeCity's award, Rick Williamson, General Manager of GrapeCity's PowerTools Division, said, "We would like to thank CodeProject community members for acknowledging our contributions. This award validates our claim that Spread offers much greater business value compared to conventional .NET Grid products."
